

I would like to say how great the Indiana telephone privacy law is. Being on the do not call list has brought tranquility to my household and reduced the stress level caused by continuous unsolicited phone calls. Since my husband and I got on the list earlier this year, our unwanted phone calls have gone from 4 or 5 calls a day to maybe 1 call a week. This is a phenomenal difference to me. Another reason I am so happy with this privacy law is actually having the privacy. My husband and I became first time parents in September. Not having my child awakened by the ringing phone or having my time with my son interrupted because I have to answer another irritating phone call is a wonderful thing. I just don't think I can explain how great a feeling it is to have privacy and sometimes not hear my phone ring all day.

The Indiana Privacy Law has made a tremendous difference in the amount of calls my house receives. I love that difference. I hope that the efforts of the Attorney General are not compromised by the FCC setting a national standard.
